

Bound For Marandoo (Harlequin Romance #2094) By Kerry Allyne During the family's first years down under she explored as much of the country as she could journeying northward into Queensland and out onto the Great Barrier Reef and sometimes south through New South Wales into Victoria. During the family's first years down under she explored as much of the country as she could journeying northward into Queensland and out onto the Great Barrier Reef and sometimes south through New South Wales into Victoria. {site_link} كيري آلاين – أجراس الشمس – Romance Contemporary Back down memory lane Read this as a teenager and am delighted that Kindle has these titles available! Kerry Allyne was one of my favorite Harlequin Romance authors growing up. You may consider it a joke or a game Miss Pascoe Tory said grimly but I heard you at the hotel last night and let me tell you I don't consider gold-digging little hussies a joke! Jade felt her own temper rising, Her early childhood was uneventful she remembered until her father came home one day and began talking about emigrating to Australia. When they eventually arrived in Australia Kerry took to her new land with a passion: A long working holiday enabled her to travel the world before returning to Australia where she met her engineer husband to be and they had a couple of children. The family eventually moved to a rural area and Kerry Allyne was born in England UK: Her early childhood was uneventful she remembered until her father came home one day and began talking about emigrating to Australia: When they eventually arrived in Australia Kerry took to her new land with a passion, A long working holiday enabled her to travel the world before returning to Australia where she met her engineer husband to be and they had a couple of children, The family eventually moved to a rural area and she started to write, She used the people and countryside as inspiration for her romances. The story is very innocent by today's standards (no premarital sex) but I enjoyed re-reading this after four decades, Romance Contemporary Old school romance with the hero getting the wrong idea about the heroine based on one overhead comment. This doesn't stop him from hiring the heroine as a companion/ secretary for his grandmother at his Outback station called Marandoo: Heroine is a fiery redhead who wants to prove to the hero that she's not a gold digger looking for a wealthy husband: She also wants to find out more about her ancestor who worked as an indentured servant at Marandoo before he drowned in the nearby rapids.) She also has to fend off a rich rakey guest of the hero's and put up with the OW's insults about her thieving ancestor. After one rough afternoon of typing for the hero she spends the rest of her time hanging out with the approving grandmother, Sunflowers with spaghetti straps or green leaves on white polyester with a square neckline - your pick: Romance Contemporary The McGraths and the Pascoes had shared an unsavoury past; will the actions of their ancestors destroy the love of their descendants? <http://www:> Romance Contemporary Jade was puzzled by Tory McGrath's completely hostile attitude, The remark he must have overheard had been said purely in fun, Gold-digging hussy indeed! She would show Tory McGrath! Bound For Marandoo (Harlequin Romance #2094)

[1]

Kerry Allyne was born in England UK. As a adult she returned to England for a short time. As a adult she returned to England for a short time. She was published by Mills Boon from 1976 to 1994. Heroine almost drowns in the same rapids. (Saved by the hero of course. But her job is easy. There's really no new ground here but I loved it. The pace was quick. Heroine had some personality. Hero was obviously fighting his feelings. And the 70's fashions were a hoot. For lovers of vintage romance. amazon.com/BOUND-FOR-MARAN. After all today was the first time she'd ever met him